“ My time with Carolina was was too brief. We met and that same day it was instant friendship. She felt to me like a long ago friend redound. We talked about everything and understood the pain we each had endured before meeting up again. She would come several times to my room and stay until the wee hours of morning and later be back before lunch. I requested she move in with me when I found her room mate was going home because I didn't want her to be alone and that was the best thing I could have done to be with her. We bantered back and forth about anything and everything and had fun doing it because others thought we weren't getting along when they couldn't get any further from the truth. I began to bf worry when she said she didn't feel good and was cold. Not sure what was wrong I gave her my best and warmest blanket to keep her warm. My concerns grew as her health began to fail and nothing seemed to be addressing her issues. Then the day she felt so bad I was asked to call Nancy I began to really worry for her. Finding out she'd been moved to Co Springs shattered my world. I spoke to her on the phone and she told me goodbye. It still hurts to remember what she said because of the hole she left in my heart when she left. This is hard to write about and makes me miss her more but knowing her pain is gone and her health is back keeps me going. She is forever a part of me and I wouldn't have it any other way.
