“ Your 49th birthday came and went. A large bright falling star ripped open the sky that night, and I know it was you. Love never dies.

“ One of his favorite foods was mashed potatoes. Mom had to make extra mashed potatoes with our meatloaf. And monster burritos. At restaurants, I remember him ordering monster burritos.

“ *I will remember you.
Our lives continue without you, but we'll never be the same. The heartache holds us back from healing. A tree has been planted in your name to bring a smile and joy to all who remember you.*

“ Today I noticed I stopped searching for you in every face seen. I noticed I have stopped so desperately searching for visible signs letting me know you are still near me. Today I noticed when the search ceased and my heart was quiet, I could feel you inside of me, cradled in the very safest part of me.....

“ He and I both had tumultuous lives in the night. We would both dream and nightmare our nights away. We had long conversations in person and on the phone about The DreamWorld and what it meant..... He was the only one who could understand my nightmares. Now I will be facing them all by myself.

“ He is freed from the torment and desperate pain that encapsulated his Spirit. He is freed from the prison that his physical body became. No more shame. No more regret or guilt. Now he can see himself as the rest of us saw him, a man who had the capacity to love greatly and who was , is , greatly loved.

“ *Its true; to know him was to love him. He was the funniest person I will ever know. He taught me how to laugh, how to appreciate music, and how to be loved.
He was a lyricist, but the lyrics that play in my head are not his: the day the music died.*

Nick, we could not have asked for a more compassionate and authentic human being to coordinate for our family. We felt at ease with you, and you talked about what we thought we weren't supposed to--- how to begin to grieve.... You're the bomb-diggity. !Besitos! --Benetta
