“ I first knew Uncle Cy when I was a gradeschool kid in Colorado Springs. He and his wife, my daddy's aunt, were close to my parents. Cy and Lolly would visit us about once every couple of months. While the other grownups were visiting, Uncle Cy would sit for hours with me, playing games or just listening to me prattle on. I loved him very much. He was like a rock for me during my teen years when we all lived in Denver and I could talk to him about my troubles. Losing contact with him hurt me deeply. Over the years, I have longed to renew that closeness. Unable to find him, I finally planted a rosebush in my garden and named it for him. While I am sad that he is gone from this world, I am so very happy to know that he knew the Lord and that someday, on the streets of glory, I will see this dear man once again.
